

I am concerned about the restrictions to personal fair use that equippping TVs with "copyrighted content blockers" will impose.

Just because recording devices can now offer near-digital quality, does this mean that I will no longer be able to use such devices to record my favorite TV shows? Will I have to pull my old VCR out of the closet and hope that it works with my new TV?

Just some food for thought from the perspective of the individual consumer.

Thanks in advance,
Michael V. Spoonauer